PREFACE.

THE present year has again been an eventful one, and 1902 will always be memorable as the year of the Coronation of His Majesty King Edward VII. together with His Consort, Queen Alexandra, and as the first occasion of the kind at which India and the British Dominions beyond the Seas have been officially represented at the ceremony. Originally arranged for June 26th, the Coronation was, almost at the last moment, postponed on account of the serious illness of the Sovereign, to the great sorrow of the whole nation. After a rapid recovery and short period of convalescence, the Coronation took place on Saturday, August 9th, in Westminster Abbey, in accordance with the ancient form and ceremony, set out on pages xxvii and xxx, but slightly altered in some details so as to avoid for His Majesty as much fatigue as possible, and it is interesting to note that this is the only time a British Coronation has taken place on Saturday, every other day in the week having previously been chosen for the event. The customary Royal progress through London, at first fixed for June 27th, eventually took place in modified form on October 25th, when Their Majesties also paid a State visit to the Guildhall, and were there entertained by the Corporation.

The recent Coronation has brought to light several points of general interest, which, while not in themselves new, have been the source of much popular confusion, owing to the time they have remained hidden by reason of the exceptional length of the last reign, and it is, therefore, perhaps well to refer here to a few of the points which suggest themselves.

The Crown of St. Edward (a very rich crown of gold embellished with pearls and other precious stones of various kinds, surmounted by a mound of gold, upon which is a gold cross having three very large oval pearls, one fixed upon the top and two others pendant from the ends) is the official Crown of England, is always in evidence at every Coronation, and is the actual Crown with which the Sovereign is crowned; it must not be confused with the Imperial State Crown worn in the procession from the Abbey and on other State occasions, or with the Cap of Estate worn on entering the Abbey, or with the Crown with which the Queen Consort is crowned. The St. Edward's Crown is only re-fitted for each Sovereign, while the State Crowns are liable to be also altered in design and arrangement.

When anointing the Sovereign, the Archbishop of Canterbury does not, as depicted at the time in many of the illustrated papers, pour the Oil from the Anointing Spoon over the Sovereign's head, which would surely be a somewhat undignified performance, but dips his fingers into the Oil poured into the Spoon, and thus anoints with the sign of the Cross. The Ampulla from which the Oil is poured into the Anointing Spoon is of gold, the Spoon being of silver gilt.

There are three sorts of robes used by the Sovereign during the Coronation ceremony:—(1) A crimson Robe of State worn on entering; (2) the actual Coronation vestments themselves, consisting of the Colobium Sindonis or sleeveless coat, the Supertunica, the Armil or Stole, and the Pallium or Imperial Mantle of cloth of gold; and (3) the Royal Robe of purple velvet worn in the procession from the Abbey; thus the Sovereign enters the Abbey in crimson, is crowned in gold, and leaves it in purple. At the ceremony of crowning both a Sovereign and His Consort, the Peers and Kings of Arms put on their coronets and crowns respectively directly the Sovereign has himself been crowned, while the Peeresses do not put on their coronets until after the crowning of the Queen Consort has taken place. The Queen Consort is not crowned of right, but by the pleasure of the Sovereign.

Summonses to a Coronation are not issued to divorced Peeresses, no matter whether they have been divorced by, or have themselves obtained a divorce from, their husbands. Widows of Peers, too, who have re-married under the rank of Peerage are not entitled to a summons, but widows of Peers who have re-married a Peer of lower degree are summoned according to the rank of their last husband.

The eldest sons of Peers are not entitled to the use of coronet or supporters even in their armorial bearings; this also applies to the younger sons of Dukes and Marquesses.

With reference to the fur used in the robes of Peers and Peeresses, and the method of distinguishing the different degrees by bars or rows of ermine, the edging described as miniver is the white fur of the ermine or stoat, with the natural black tails left attached, while the cape is furred with miniver pure (i.e., the white fur of the ermine without the natural black tails), and is powdered with the distinguishing bars or rows of ermine (i.e., narrow pieces of black fur symmetrically sewn on).

The Cap of Maintenance borne in front of the Sovereign as an emblem of dignity on certain State occasions, such as the opening of Parliament, is a round velvet cap turned up with ermine, but not of the same shape as the conventional cap of maintenance depicted in many crests.

All swords in the Coronation procession are carried naked as well as erect throughout, except the Sword of State, which for a short period at the early part of the ceremony is carried in its scabbard.

The mitres of the Archbishops and Bishops are all similar in design heraldically, except that of the Bishop of Durham, who, as nominally Count Palatine of Durham, bears his issuing out of a ducal coronet; mitres are not, however, worn at a Coronation.

The King's Banner, commonly, but erroneously, called the Royal Standard, can only properly be flown over buildings when the Sovereign is there in person, or on ships when His Majesty is on board, and the Royal Tradesmen, although permitted to use the Royal Arms as a sign of their appointment, are specially prohibited from flying the Royal Standard.

The usual list of New Year's honours was omitted in 1902 owing to the distribution which had previously taken place so recently as November 9th, 1901, but in view of the coming Delhi Durbar the practice of gazetting New Year's honours will no doubt be again resumed on January 1st, 1903, with special reference to India.

Despite the above-mentioned fact, it is, however, not surprising that in a year like the present, which has seen the termination of a prolonged war in South Africa, and the Coronation of a British Sovereign and His Consort, as well as a State visit to the City, the distribution of honours in connection with these events, added to a somewhat long Birthday list, has again been a very extensive one, and that the number of individuals newly honoured has reached a total of over 1,140, so that the number of new Peers, Privy Councillors, Baronets, Knights, and Companions, or Members of the various Orders created during only the two years 1901 and 1902 now mounts up to the extraordinary figure of over 2,850—more than equalling the aggregate number of all the honours conferred during the whole of the preceding eleven years. Of those bestowed this year more than 400 of the recipients have only been nominated on or since October 29th, yet their names and particulars all duly appear in this edition of "Debrett."

Although the Coronation itself was postponed, the list of honours connected with that ceremony (which also included a large number of rewards for South African service) was published on the day at first fixed, and included notification of the institution of two new Orders:—(1) The Order of Merit, an exclusive Order carrying with it no special title or precedence, but by the express command of His Majesty the recipients of this Order have been accorded the right to place the initials O.M. after their names, after those of the Bath and before those of the Star of India, and appointments were at once made to the Order; and (2) the IMPERIAL SERVICE ORDER (no precedence yet assigned), for members of the Civil Services, with the right to place the initials I.S.O. after their names. To this latter Order no appointments were made until November 9th, and it is noticeable that this Order indicates a new departure, being a "mixed" one, available for ladies as well as gentlemen, the appointment of one lady having already taken place.

Just as the last edition of "Debrett" was being published, a notification was made that an additional badge—the Red Dragon—was to be added to the achievement of the Prince of Wales in honour of that Principality.

From December 6th, 1901, to December 5th, 1902, 7 new Peers * have been created, 1 Earl † has been promoted to a Marquessate, and 4 Barons ‡ to Viscounties (including one with special remainder), while 4 Peerages have become extinct and 2 dormant.§ In the same period the highest number of names ‖ ever added to the Roll of the Baronetage in one year, namely 25, has to be recorded, and 6 Baronetcies ¶ have become extinct. Now that the war in South Africa is over, the present opportunity is taken of thanking all those officers, who, although on active service, found time and inclination to reply to the many communications forwarded them, and thus have very largely assisted in keeping up the reputation of "Debrett" for accuracy and fulness of detail as a standard work of reference.

The voluntary information supplied by thousands of correspondents from all parts of the world, and the continued valuable assistance afforded by Charles H. Athill, Esq., F.S.A., Richmond Herald, has again to be most gratefully acknowledged by

THE EDITOR.

TABLE OF PRECEDENCE.

PRECEDENCE is always derived from the father, or husband, except in the case of a Peeress in her own right.

A Dowager Peeress, or Baronetess, while a widow, takes precedence of the wife of the incumbent of the title.

The children of a living Peer, or Baronet, have precedence above the children of the previous possessor, or possessors, of the title.

If the daughter of a Peer marries a Peer she takes her husband's rank, but if she marry the eldest son of a Peer she ranks either according to her own inherent precedence (i.e., as the daughter of her father), or according to that of her husband (i.e., as the wife of the eldest son of a Duke, Marquess, Earl, etc.), whichever happens to be the higher, no matter what his courtesy title may be.

To Foreign Ambassadors, etc., precedence is generally conceded above all Peers.

Foreign Titles of Nobility borne by British subjects afford their holders no precedence whatever in this country, and strictly speaking a Royal License should be obtained for their use.

TITLES, ORDERS, AND DEGREES OF PRECEDENCE AND DIGNITY.

THE SOVEREIGN.

FIRST, in honour and dignity, as in power—indeed, the seat and fountain of all three—is the Sovereign, who possesses, according to Camden,

> "Many rights and privileges peculiar to majesty, termed by the learned lawyers sacra sacrorum, that is, sacred and individual, or inseparable, because they cannot be severed; and the ordinary royal prerogatives, termed the flowers of his crown, in which respect they affirm that the regal material crown is adorned with flowers. Some of these are held by positive or written law, others which, by right of custom, by a silent consent of all men without law, prescription of time has allowed, the king justly enjoys."

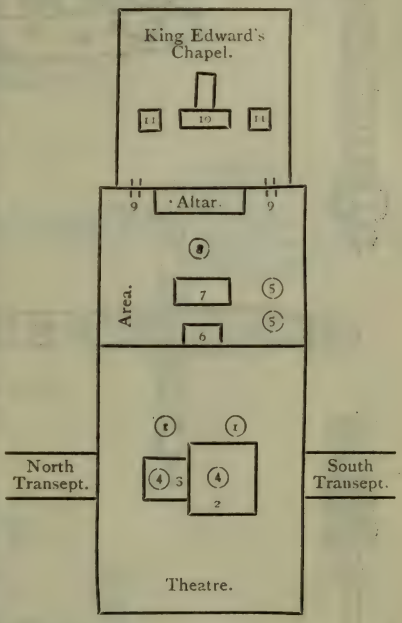
The Crown is held under the Act of Succession (12 and 13 William III., cap. 2), the wording of which, with reference to succession, is:—

> "For default of issue of the said Princess Ann and of His Majesty respectively the crown and regall government of the said kingdoms of England France and Ireland and of the dominions thereunto belonging with the royall state and dignity of the said realms and all honours stiles titles regalities prerogatives powers jurisdictions and authorities to the same belonging and appertaining shall be remain and continue to the said most excellent Princess Sophia [of Hanover] and the heirs of her body † being Protestants."

Among the more clearly defined prerogatives of the British monarch are those of convoking

* In 1838 Her late Majesty Queen Victoria commanded an Imperial State Crown to be made for her Coronation and State occasions of a design entirely different to the above illustration, with jewels taken from old crowns and others furnished. It consisted of diamonds, pearls, rubies, sapphires and emeralds set in silver and gold; it had a crimson velvet cap with ermine border, and was lined with white silk. Its gross weight was 39 oz. 5 dwts. troy. The lower part of the band, above the ermine border, consisted of a row of 129 pearls, and the upper part of the band of a row of 112 pearls, between which, in front of the crown, was a large sapphire (partly drilled) purchased for the crown by King George IV. At the back was a sapphire of smaller size, and 6 other sapphires (three on each side), between which 8 emeralds. Above and below the seven sapphires were 14 diamonds, and around the eight emeralds 128 diamonds. Between the emeralds and the sapphires were 16 trefoil ornaments, containing 16 diamonds. Above the band were 8 sapphires, surmounted by 8 diamonds, between which were eight festoons consisting of 148 diamonds. In the front of the crown, and in the centre of a diamond Maltese cross, was the famous ruby, said to have been given to Edward, Prince of Wales, son of Edward III., called the Black Prince, by Don Pedro, King of Castile, after the battle of Najera, near Vittoria, A.D. 1367. This ruby was worn in the helmet of Henry V. at the battle of Agincourt, A.D. 1415. It is pierced quite through, after the Eastern custom, the upper part of the piercing being filled up by a small ruby. Around this ruby, in order to form the cross, were 75 brilliant diamonds. Three other Maltese crosses, forming the two sides and back of the crown, had emerald centres and contained respectively 132, 124, and 130 brilliant diamonds. Between the four Maltese crosses were four ornaments in the form of the French fleur-de-lis, with 4 rubies in the centres, and surrounded by rose diamonds, containing respectively 85, 86, and 87 rose diamonds. From the Maltese crosses issued four imperial arches composed of oak leaves and acorns; the leaves contained 728 rose, table, and brilliant diamonds; 32 pearls form the acorns, set in cups containing 54 rose diamonds and one table diamond. The total number of diamonds in the arches and acorns was 108 brilliant, 116 table, and 559 rose diamonds. From the upper part of the arches were suspended four large pendant pear-shaped pearls, with rose diamond cups, containing 12 rose diamonds, and stems containing 24 very small rose diamonds. Above the arch stood the mound, containing in the lower hemisphere 204 brilliants, and in the upper, 244 brilliants, the zone and arc being composed of 33 rose diamonds. The cross on the summit had a rose-cut sapphire in the centre, surrounded by 4 large brilliants, and 108 smaller brilliants. Summary of jewels comprised in this crown:—One large ruby, irregularly polished, one large broadspread sapphire, 16 sapphires, 11 emeralds, 4 rubies, 1,363 brilliant diamonds, 1,273 rose diamonds, 147 table diamonds, 4 drop-shaped pearls, and 373 pearls. For King Edward this State Crown was re-fitted and lightened, while that for the Queen Consort was composed entirely of diamonds set in silver, had six arches, and contained the famous Koh-i-nor diamond as its central jewel. These crowns must not be confused with St. Edward's crown, the official crown of England, which is only used at a coronation.

† A limitation which appears to denote, however remote the contingency, the possibility of abeyance.

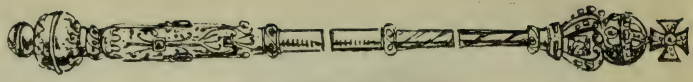


adjourning, removing, and dissolving Parliament, refusing assent to Bills, without which assent they cannot become law, increasing the number of Peers, declaring war at pleasure, choosing and appointing all commanders and officers by land and sea, and all judges, councillors, officers of state, magistrates, Archbishops, Bishops, and high ecclesiastical dignitaries; bestowing all public honours, and pardoning criminals, besides exercising many other powers, by the advice of the Cabinet Ministers, who, however, alone are responsible, the theory of English law being that the Sovereign cannot commit wrong.

Another theory of our law is that the King (or Queen) never dies—substantially, that the throne is never vacant, the succession of the heir being instantaneous, and a meeting of the Privy Council is held immediately after the Demise of the Crown (usually the next day) to give directions for proclaiming the new Sovereign and to swear in the members of the new Privy Council, the proclamation taking place in London at St. James's Palace, Temple Bar, and Royal Exchange, two or three days later. To this first meeting of the Privy Council of the new Reign, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, etc., of London, although not themselves Privy Councillors, are invited. Since the Reform Act Parliament does not dissolve at the Demise of the Crown, and, if at the time adjourned or prorogued, meets immediately, or, if dissolved, the old Parliament must meet at once and may serve for six months. The ceremony of a coronation is, therefore, merely a solemn recognition and confirmation of the royal descent, and consequent right of accession, and is not necessary for the security of the title to the crown. It is, however, highly essential, inasmuch as it tends to a formal establishment of those rights which the people claim from the monarch in return for the duty and allegiance they are bound to observe towards the new Sovereign.

CORONATION: The date of the coronation is approximately fixed and proclaimed in London at the same places as the accession some months before the ceremony itself takes place, and a special Commission is appointed to hear and determine petitions and claims in connection therewith.

The coronation ceremonial is probably more splendid, emblematic, and elaborate in England than in any other country. Instance the anointing with oil, poured into the golden anointing spoon from the Ampulla or Golden Eagle, a practice which has been continued upwards of one thousand years; the formal crowning with the Royal or King Edward's crown carried in the initial procession immediately in front of the Sovereign between the orb on the right and the sceptre with dove on the left, the several religious ceremonies, besides the insignia of royalty, among which regalia are a ruby ring, to signify faithfulness; the Armillæ, or bracelets (not now used), for good works; purple robes, to attract reverence; and a diadem, to blazon glory; also the Orb (a golden sphere enriched with jewels and surmounted by a cross, the whole being some eleven inches in height), the emblem of sovereignty; two sceptres (Royal Sceptre with the Cross and the Sceptre with the Dove); four swords—all carried upright—(the Sword of State in scabbard, two-handed, borne in front of St. Edward's Crown; the Sword of Mercy, or Curtana (without point), carried between, on the left the Sword of Justice to the Spirituality, (obtusely pointed), and on the right the Sword of Justice to the Temporality (sharp pointed); the golden spurs (prick spurs) borne in front of Curtana, between on the right St. Edward's Staff (with an orb at the end of it), and on the left the Sceptre with the Cross. [For description of the Regalia see "DEBRETT'S DICTIONARY OF THE CORONATION," and for illustrations see next page.]



Briefly, the principal features of the Coronation Ceremony (occupying about four hours), which on each successive occasion closely follows former precedent, are as follows, but with some variations in detail:—The Sovereign (and Consort), accompanied by the members of the Royal Family, go to Westminster Abbey [see rough plan herewith], and the Regalia and other emblems having already been prepared there, and handed to those who are to bear them, the King robed in crimson robes, and the Queen Consort in purple, walk in procession with those carrying the regalia, and proceed through the west door to chairs (1) placed below and before the thrones—a series of raised steps that on the right (2) of five steps for the Sovereign, and that on the left a smaller one (3) of three steps for the Consort, surmounted by chairs of State (4), upon the theatre or elevated platform situated under the lantern and between the north and south transepts—where, surrounded by the Great Officers of State and the noblemen bearing the regalia (some of which is borne by hereditary right), the Recognition form is recited by the Archbishop at each of the four sides, east, south, west, and north, the Sovereign turning to each of these four directions, and the people assembled replying with "God save King——(or Queen ——)." The Bible, Paten, and Cup, having now been placed on the Altar, the procession passes to the area or space before the Altar, where, kneeling on the steps, the Sovereign makes the first oblation, subsequently followed by the Queen Consort—a pall or altar cloth of cloth of gold, and an ingot of pure gold of a lb. weight, which the Archbishop receives (as well as all other oblations) standing, and places on the altar. [At the Coronation of King Edward VII. this oblation was transferred to the Communion Service.] The Sovereign (and Consort) next pass to chairs with faldstools (5) provided on the south side of the area, where they kneel while the Litany is read from a desk (6) between the area and the theatre, the ante-communion service recited, and the sermon preached, the regalia having first been placed upon the Altar. Next the Coronation Oath is administered by the Archbishop, and the Sovereign, again proceeding to the Altar, takes the Oath and kisses the Bible, returning again to the chair (5) on the south side of the area, whence, after the singing of a hymn, the Sovereign once more proceeds to the Altar, and is divested of the crimson robes. The Sovereign then goes to the Ancient Coronation, or King Edward's, Chair (7) of oak, underneath the seat of which is the sacred Inauguration Stone, brought from Scotland by King Edward I., and the ceremony of anointing takes place on the head, breast, and palms of the hands, with Holy Oil poured into the Golden Anointing Spoon from the Ampulla, or Golden Eagle, four Knights of the Garter meanwhile holding a rich silken pall over the Sovereign's head. After the anointing the Dean of Westminster places upon the Sovereign—when a King—the Colobium Sindonis, or sleeveless garment of fine white linen, followed by the supertunica. The Great Golden Spurs (prick-spurs) are then presented to the Sovereign, still sitting in King Edward's Chair. These spurs, having been returned to the Altar, the Sword of State is now exchanged for another Sword in purple scabbard, which is placed by the Archbishop upon the Altar; he then places it in the right hand of the Sovereign, who is afterwards girt with same, and prayer having been said, proceeds to the Altar, returning the sword to the Archbishop, who puts it back upon the Altar, while the Sovereign returns to King Edward's Chair. This Sword is at once redeemed for a sum of money, and is then carried naked in front of the Sovereign during the rest of the ceremony. Investiture with the Armil or Stole, and with the Dalmatic Robe, Pallium, or Imperial Mantle of cloth of gold then follows, and the Sovereign receives the Orb (shortly returned to the Altar) in the right hand from the Archbishop, who subsequently places the Ruby Ring on the fourth finger of that hand, while a right hand glove is presented by the Lord of the Manor of Worksop. The Sceptre with Cross is then taken in the right hand from the Archbishop, while the Sceptre with the Dove is taken in the left Now, standing before the Altar, the Archbishop of Canterbury, having consecrated the Crown, known as King Edward's, places it upon the head of the Sovereign, who still sits in King Edward's Chair (7), when all the people shout "God save the King (or Queen)," the Peers assembled put on their coronets, the Bishops their caps, and the Kings of Arms their crowns. Being now crowned, and having been presented with the Holy Bible, which is returned to the Archbishop, the Sovereign, after the Benediction, goes back to the theatre, while the Te Deum is sung, and ascends the Throne (2) and is placed thereon (4), being again surrounded by the Great Officers of State, etc., while homage is rendered, first by the Archbishops and Bishops, and then by the nobility (rank by rank), each kissing the Sovereign's left cheek, and touching the Crown on his (or her) head; meanwhile commemorative medals (when given in the Abbey) are distributed, the trumpets sound, and the people again shout, "God save King (or Queen) ———," etc. The coronation of the Sovereign, now being completed, that of a Queen Consort follows at a faldstool (8), placed between the Altar and King Edward's Chair. The Consort is there anointed on the head, a canopy being held over her by four peeresses has a Ring placed on her finger as a seal of sincere faith and a Crown on her head—here the peeresses put on their coronets—receives the Sceptre with the Cross into her right hand and the Ivory Rod with the Dove into her left hand, and then proceeds to and ascends her Throne (3), and is placed thereon (4) bowing to the Sovereign as she passes. Proceeding now from their Thrones to the Altar (the Sword of State being borne in front), and removing their Crowns, the Sovereign kneels, presents Bread and Wine, and makes an oblation, followed by the Queen Consort with a similar oblation [at the Coronation of King Edward VII. it was an altar cloth and an ingot of gold of a pound weight], they then repair to their Chairs (5), on the south side of the area, whence, having communicated and replaced their Crowns, a return is made to the Thrones (4) for the final prayers. When the procession is reformed the Sovereign (and Consort), carrying their Sceptres, pass through the doors (9) in state (the Sovereign by the south door and the Consort by the north door) to St. Edward's Chapel where, standing before St. Edward's Altar (10), the Sceptres and Crowns are given up and placed upon it, then, having retired to the traverses (11) provided, and the Sovereign having exchanged the Imperial Mantle for a Purple velvet Robe of State, the Sovereign (and Consort), now wearing their State Crowns, and bearing Sceptres with the Cross in their right hands, and the Sovereign an Orb and his Consort a Sceptre with the Dove in their left hands, pass back to the west door of the Abbey, with the Princes, Peers, Peeresses, etc., all wearing their coronets, following. [Owing to the recent illness of H.M. King Edward VII., the above forms were slightly modified on the occasion of his Coronation in August, 1902.]

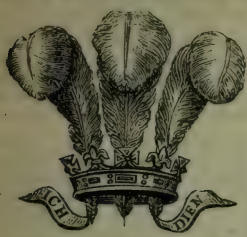
The derivation of the word king, is, according to Chamberlayne, from the Saxon word Konig, or Cyning, which comes from Can, intimating power, or Ken knowledge, wherewith every sovereign, should be invested.

Some of the titles of our Saxon kings were very quaint and pompous. These were discontinued by the Normans, and it was not until Henry IV. adopted the title of "Grace," that prefixes came into use. These prefixes were successively changed (at the pleasure of the sovereigns themselves) into "Excellent Grace," "High and Mighty Prince," and "Highness," until Henry VIII. adopted those of "Majesty" and "Dread, Sovereign."

In 1876 Queen Victoria was proclaimed Empress of India, but the Imperial Dignity is not adopted in any part of the dominions except India. In 1901 the following addition was made to the style and title of King Edward VII.—viz., "and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas."

THE QUEEN (CONSORT).



The Queen—as Consort of the Sovereign—has a separate Court and Household, is represented in Courts of Law (where she can sue or be sued in her own name, with the affix of "Queen of England") by her own Attorney-General and Solicitor-General, and to compass or imagine her death (during the lifetime of her husband) is high treason. Provision is made for her by Statute, and she is usually, though not of right, crowned with the King.

THE HEIR-APPARENT TO THE CROWN

Is next below the Sovereign in all honour and dignity—not as participating or comparing with the latter, who stands alone and supreme, but as enjoying the largest share of the honour which flows from the Crown.

No person can hold this position save a child of the Sovereign, or, if the former be dead, his, or her, direct descendant. This constant preference of the direct line to the closest collateral branch distinguishes the European from some of the Asiatic orders of succession, and tends greatly to preclude confusion and discord.

The male Heir Apparent has, since the institution of the title by Edward I. (who conferred it on his son, Edward), been usually but not invariably created Prince of Wales, and, since 1399, the Earldom of Chester has always been conferred, together with the Principality of Wales. There is no succession to this title, which, at every vacancy, becomes merged in the Crown, and is only renewed by the Sovereign's pleasure. Thus, had George IV. died whilst Prince of Wales, his next brother, though heir-apparent, would not have been the Prince of Wales without being so created; similarly on the succession of King Edward VII. his eldest surviving son was not Prince of Wales until so created some eight months later.

PLUME OF THE ELDEST SON OF THE SOVEREIGN.*

The Sovereign's first-born son is Duke of Cornwall from the moment of his birth, and becomes immediately entitled to the revenues of his duchy, which, during the period the title is dormant, are held at usufruct and accumulation for the benefit of the next Duke. This title, however, unlike that of Prince of Wales, does not always become merged in the Crown on succession to the Monarchy or at death, but passes at once to the next heir-apparent being the eldest living son of the Sovereign, to whom it is strictly limited, but in the event of the death of such heir-apparent his eldest son would not be Duke of Cornwall. Some years ago the net revenues of the property, which had been grossly mismanaged, were about £14,000 per annum, but under the able superintendence of the late Prince Consort, husband of H.M. Queen Victoria, a system of energy, carefulness, and thrift was introduced, through which they have risen enormously, and the income now enjoyed in virtue of the duchy rights is £70,000. The Sandringham estate was purchased out of a very large sum of ready-money, arising from this accumulation of the annual revenues of this Duchy during minority.

CORONET OF ELDEST SON OF THE SOVEREIGN.

By course of the civil law he sits at the right hand of the Sovereign in all solemn assemblies of state and honour; but he has no kingly prerogatives, and acknowledges reverence to his sovereign.

An old statute of Edward III. enacts "that to compass or imagine the death of the King's eldest son and heir is crimen læsæ majestatis" (high treason).

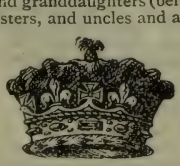
On the union of the Crowns of England and Scotland, King James's son (Prince Henry) was created "Prince of Great Britain and Ireland," and this nominally higher title survives; but the more venerable honour long since caused the other to fall into disuse.

The theoretical forms laid down for the ceremony of creating a Prince of Wales are thus:—

"He is presented before the King in his surcoat, cloak and mantle of crimson velvet, and girt with a belt of the same, when the King putteth a cap of crimson velvet, indented and turned up with ermine, and a coronet on his head, as a token of principality; and the King also putteth into his hand a verge of gold, the emblem of government, and a ring of gold on his middle finger, to intimate that he must be a husband to his country and a father to his children. To him are likewise given and granted letters patent, to hold the same principality, to him and his heirs, Kings of England, by which words the separation of this principality is for ever prohibited. The coronet placed on his head is of gold, and consists of crosses patée and fleur-de-lys, with the addition of one arch, and in the midst a ball and a cross, as hath the royal diadem, which was solemnly ordered to be used by a grant dated February 9, 1660-61, 11th Charles II., xxx. His mantle which he wears at the coronation is doubled below the elbow with ermine, spotted diamond-wise: but the robe which he wears in Parliament is adorned with bars or guards of ermine, set at an equal distance one from the other, with a gold lace above each bar."

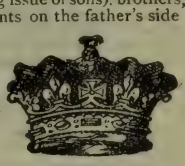
In 1898 Letters Patent under the Great Seal were granted, declaring that the children of the eldest son of any Prince of Wales shall at all times have the title of "Royal Highness."

THE HEIR-PRESUMPTIVE TO THE CROWN.



When the Sovereign is without issue, or surviving issue, and the latter have died childless, the nearest heir (male or female) is Heir-Presumptive, and as such is the chief person of the realm next to the Sovereign.

OTHER MEMBERS OF THE ROYAL FAMILY.



The rank and position of these are defined in the general "Tables of Precedence."

The Royal Marriage Act prohibits the marriage of personages (descendants of George II.) connected with the Blood Royal (except issue of Princesses who have married into Foreign Families) without the sanction of the Sovereign, but this is considerably modified by a conditional proviso, or door of grace, by which a marriage contracted after the age of twenty-five is valid if a year's notice has been given to the Privy Council and both Houses of Parliament, and they have not interfered during that period expressing their disapprobation. Morganatic marriages do not give the rank of the husband to the wife or issue of the marriage, and although duly consecrated and the issue legitimate, do not confer upon the children any right of succession to hereditary honours.

The Sovereign's sons, daughters, grandsons and granddaughters (being issue of sons), brothers, sisters, and uncles and aunts on the father's side are styled "Royal Highness," so also are the children of the eldest son of any Prince of Wales [see ante], while grandchildren being issue of daughters are usually granted by Roya

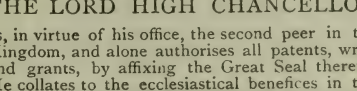
* In 1876 the old heraldic plume was adopted, the feathers in which are presented perfectly erect [see page 6].

Warrant the title of "Highness." The title of "Princess Royal" belongs to the eldest daughter of the Sovereign for the time being.

The coronet of the Princes of the Blood Royal is similar to that of the Heir-Apparent, but without the arch and orb.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY *

Is the first peer of England next to the Royal Family, preceding not only all Dukes, but all the great officers of the Crown. The Bishop of London is his provincial Dean, the Bishop of Lincoln his Chancellor, and the Bishop of Rochester his Chaplain. "It belongs to him to crown the King;" and the Sovereign and his or her Consort, wherever they may be located, are speciales domestici parochiani Arch.. Cant. (parishioners of the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury).



The ecclesiastical and secular power of the Archbishop of Canterbury was formerly enormous, especially when he held the office of Lord Chancellor; and instances are not few in which the influence of the Archiepiscopal see was formidable to the throne itself. Since the Reformation, the Archbishop's secular influence may be said to have altogether ceased.

The Archbishop of Canterbury is Primate of all England, is entitled to the prefix of "Your Grace," and styles himself "By Divine Providence, Lord Archbishop of Canterbury."

An Archbishop's mitre is the same as that of a Bishop.

THE LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR

Is, in virtue of his office, the second peer in the Kingdom, and alone authorises all patents, writs and grants, by affixing the Great Seal thereto. He collates to the ecclesiastical benefices in the gift of the Crown, is Keeper of the Great Seal, head of the Legal Profession in England, and President of the Supreme Court of Judicature, and discharges in the House of Lords functions analogous to those of the Speaker of the House of Commons.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR'S MACE.

For many years the Lord High Chancellor (when not of Baronial rank) has been invariably created a peer concomitantly with his appointment.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF YORK

Is the third peer in the Kingdom, and precedes all secular peers, except the Lord High Chancellor. He is "Primate of England," has the privilege of crowning the Consort, and is her perpetual chaplain. He is entitled to the prefix of "Your Grace," styles himself "By Divine Permission, Lord Archbishop of York," and possesses within his own province powers nearly equivalent to those exercised by the Archbishop of Canterbury within his.

THE NOBILITY.

The true criterion of "nobility" is now as it always has been, the lawful bearing of arms, and in all countries outside the United Kingdom, the term "noble" is habitually used in this its original sense, and in France at least precedence is invariably regulated by the date of the grant of arms, and not according to titular distinction, but in England the custom has arisen, however incorrect in itself, of practically restricting the use of the word "nobleman" to members of the peerage, and those who by courtesy bear titles in virtue of their immediate connection with noble houses: it should, however, always be borne in mind that, strictly speaking, every one bearing duly authorised arms is equally entitled to be styled "noble," be he Peer, Baronet, Knight, or Gentleman.

The nobility (using the word in its proper acceptation) of this kingdom is usually divided into two classes—the greater and the less (nobiles majores and nobiles minores)—the former customarily consisting of all degrees of the peers spiritual and temporal from a Baron upwards and inclusive.

PEERS.

Practically, the degrees of the Peerage * in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland are five—viz., Dukes, Marquesses, Earls, Viscounts, and Barons (including Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, who are Life Peers), to which may be added a sixth—viz., those Archbishops, and Bishops, who are entitled to a seat in the House of Peers, and possess all the faculties and privileges of Peers of Parliament during the time they hold office.

The ceremony of admitting a peer into the House of Lords is thus: He is introduced by two peers of his own degree, who conduct him to the Lord Chancellor. His patent is carried by Garter King of Arms, the new peer presents it together with his writ of summons to the Lord Chancellor; this dignitary directs the same to be read, the oaths are administered, the peer takes his seat, and then, rising, returns to the Chancellor, who congratulates him upon his succession, or elevation, as the case may be.

The privileges enjoyed by peers were formerly very numerous. Some of these would now be considered intolerable, while others have fallen into desuetude from the extinction of the matters and circumstances to which they related. But some important ones continue, e.g.:—

They are free from arrests for debt, as being the Queen's hereditary counsellors; therefore a peer cannot be outlawed in any civil action, and no attachment lies against his person; but if he becomes a bankrupt he cannot vote until his bankruptcy proceedings are ended.

They are free from attending courts leet, or sheriffs' turns, or, in cases of riot, the posse comitatus.

In criminal cases they are tried by peers only, who give their verdict simply upon their honour, in a court specially fitted up at the expense of the Crown, in the middle of Westminster Hall.

They may sit with their heads covered in courts of justice.

* The Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord High Chancellor, and the Archbishop of York, constitute a kind of distinctive belt of separation between the Royal Family and general nobility; but the wives and children of Archbishops have not any social precedence.

* SCOTCH AND IRISH PEERS.—Scotch peers take precedence of British peers of the same rank created since the Union with Scotland; and Irish peers created before the Union with Ireland, in like manner, take place of British peers created since. Irish peers of later creation than the Union rank, according to the dates of their patents, among the peers of Great Britain and Ireland. Peers holding only Scotch or Irish titles do not sit of ndividual right in the House of Peers, but only as representatives of their fellow-peers.

Irish Representative Peers are elected by their fellow-peers for life.

Scotch Representative Peers are elected by their fellow-peers for one Parliament only.

Irish peers (not being representative peers) are permitted to represent English constituencies in the House of Commons, but cannot sit for Irish counties or boroughs.

Peers of England, Scotland, Great Britain, and the United Kingdom are not entitled to sit in the House of Commons.

Each peer may qualify a certain number of chaplains as follows :—An Archbishop, eight ; a Duke, six ; a Marquess, five ; an Earl, five ; a Viscount, four ; a Bishop, six ; a Baron, three. A Knight of the Garter may qualify three ; and a Peeress, being a widow, two.

To secure the honour of, and to prevent the spreading of any scandal upon peers or any great officers of the realm, by reports, there is an express law, called scandalum magnatum, by which any man convicted of making a scandalous report, though true, against a peer of the realm, is condemned to an arbitrary fine, and to remain in custody till the same be paid.

Barons Kingsale and Forester are the only peers claiming the privilege of remaining covered in the royal presence without special permission.

In case of a poll tax, peers bear the greatest burden, as everyone is then taxed according to his degree.

A peer may not interfere in any way in the election of members to parliament.

Occasionally the eldest son of a peer is summoned to the House of Lords during his father's lifetime in one of his father's minor titles, and should he predecease his father the title and seat would pass to his son (if any).

Claims to peerages are dealt with by the Committee of Privileges of the House of Lords.

Duke. — This title is the highest of our designation of nobility. We have not "princes" outside the blood-royal. Indeed, so pre-eminent in dignity is the ducal title, that each royal prince on, or shortly after attaining his majority, is usually created a Duke, as if the latter were the superior distinction. Thus, Prince Alfred was created Duke of Edinburgh and Prince Arthur, Duke of Connaught.

DUKE'S CORONET.

Much learned ingenuity has been expended in endeavouring to trace the origin of a title which has, in one meaning or another, existed since the origin of the Latin tongue—dux (a leader) indicating a leading man or chieftain ; and, however antiquarians may refine upon the matter, there cannot be any doubt that the word "duke" means a man of the highest rank and mark.

Hollingshead, in his "Chronicle," fo. 235, says that "Kinge Edgar's second wife was called Alfreda, the daughter of Orgar, Duke of Devon, by whom hee had yssue, Egelthred, that was afterwards Kinge of this lande and is beried in Powlis." This, however, may have been only an official title, for the word frequently appears in Saxon chronicles in a sense inferior to that of earl, bishop, and even abbot.

Otho the Great, about the year 970, is supposed to have been the first to regularly constitute the title of duke, as one of honour and nobility ; and it became hereditary in France and other parts of the Continent long before it was adopted in England. It has been surmised that one cause of its not being introduced earlier in England was the reluctance of the Norman kings—themselves Dukes of Normandy—to grant subjects a title resembling their own.

The following passage from a quaint old writer gives an authentic account of the creation of the first English Duke :—

> "The first Duke that I finde sence the Conquest was made by Kinge Eduard III. xj. regni sui ; where he made of the earldome of Cornwayle a dutchye, and created the Black Prince, his eldest sonne, Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornwayle, and Earl of Chester, and I have a dede made by the said Black Prince, wherein his stile is, Edward Disne Fitz de Roy D'Engleter et de France, Prince de Aquitoine et de Gales, Duc de Cornwall, Count de Chester, and Seignor de Biscane."

In former times hereditary dukes were created with the following or similar words :—

> "We give and grant the name, title, state, style, place, seat, pre-eminence, honour, authority, and dignity of a Duke, and by the cincture of a sword, and imposition of a cap and coronet of gold upon his head, as also by delivering unto him a verge of gold, we do really invest," &c., but this and other ceremonies formerly attending the creation of dukes and other peers are no longer observed.

The ducal order, which was extinct, or in abeyance during Elizabeth's reign, was revived by James I. in the person of his favourite, Villiers.

The mantle or surcoat (to be worn over full Court dress, uniform, or regimentals) which a duke wears at a coronation of king or queen is of crimson velvet lined with white taffeta, edged with miniver, and the cape furred with miniver pure, and powdered with four bars or rows of ermine (i.e., narrow pieces of black fur). His parliamentary robes are of fine scarlet cloth, lined with taffeta, and doubled with four guards of ermine at equal distances, with gold lace above each guard, and tied up to the left shoulder by a white riband ; his cap is of crimson velvet turned up with ermine, having a gold tassel on the top ; his coronet is a circle of gold (silver gilt) chased as jewelled and set round with eight strawberry leaves. Parliamentary robes for other degrees are similar to above with the distinguishing number of guards. He is styled His Grace, and by the Sovereign in public instruments, Our right trusty and right entirely beloved cousin, with the addition of and counsellor when a member of the Privy Council. The coronation robe of a duchess consists of a crimson velvet mantle with cape furred with miniver pure, the cape powdered with four rows of ermine (i.e., narrow pieces of black fur), and edged round with miniver pure five inches wide ; the kirtle meeting at the waist over a white panel, and the bodice being low and tight fitting, with stomacher and panel of white or cream material, fur bordering the top of the bodice and being continued in a band over each shoulder. Her coronet is the same as that of her husband, while her train is two yards in length.

The eldest son of a duke bears by courtesy one of his father's inferior titles, and each younger son and daughter is addressed by his or her Christian name, as "Lord John," or "Lady Mary."

Marquess is a title apparently of German origin, and, as the name implies, is derived from the Government of marches, or frontier provinces ; it was called by the Saxons, Markin Reeve ; and by the Germans, Markgrave. It has the next place of honour to that of a duke, and was introduced many years subsequent to the establishment of that dignity in England. The first on whom that honour was conferred was the great favourite of King Richard II., Robert de Vere, Earl of Oxford, who was created Marquess of Dublin in 1385, and placed in Parliament between the dukes and earls. The marquesses were created by the King by "cincture of the sword, and imposition of the cap of honour and dignitie, with the coronet, as also by the delivery of a charter or writing." The creations, however, were not very numerous, and it would appear that the new honour was not greatly coveted by the old nobility as in the Parliamentary Rolls it is recorded that

> "John de Beaufort, Earl of Somerset, was by Richard II. created Marquess of Dorset, and when, afterwards, Henry VI. deprived him of that title, the Commoners of England made humble suit in Parliament to the King, that he would restore him to his title of marquess. The Earl himself opposed the petition, saying that 'It was a new dignitie, and altogether unknown to his ancestors, and that, therefore, he neither craved it, nor in any wise would he accept it.'"

The creation to this dignity was formerly attended with nearly the same ceremony as that of a duke; but it now simply takes place by patent under the Great Seal.

The coronation robes are the same as those of a Duke, with three and a half rows of ermine (i.e., four on the right side, and three on the left); the cap is of crimson velvet turned up with ermine, having a gold tassel at top; the coronet is of gold chased as jewelled, with four silver balls, and four golden strawberry leaves mixed alternately, the latter raised a little on points above the rim. A marchioness's coronation robe has four inches of miniver and three and a half rows of ermine, and the train is a yard and three quarters long. The coronet of a marchioness is the same as that of a marquess.

The general style of a marquess is Most Honourable; and he is styled by the King or Queen, Our right trusty and entirely beloved cousin, and counsellor when of the Privy Council.

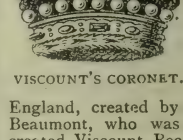
The eldest son of a marquess bears by courtesy one of his father's inferior titles, and each younger son and daughter is addressed by his or her Christian name, as "Lord George," or "Lady Jane."

Earl.—It has been customary to identify this ancient English dignity with the Latin Comes "Companion" French Comte; Anglicè, Count), one of the duties or privileges of possessors of the title being to accompany the King, and to give counsel, advice, and aid on important occasions. We are told that "Constantine the Great, in order to secure the attachment of his followers, created a number of these Comites, as Comes Domesticorum (Master of the Household), Comes Stabuli (Master of the Horse); also such dignities as Comes Orientis, Comes Africæ (Lieutenant of the East, of Africa, &c.). Thence ever after the name of Comes imparted dignity; and the authority or government, which was at first temporary, was afterwards enjoyed for life. Moreover, in process of time, when the Roman empire was divided into many kingdoms, this title was retained, and our English Saxons called those in Latin Comites and Consules, whom, in their own language they called Ealdormen, the same which the Danes in their tongue called Eorlas, that is honourable, as Ethelward writes, by which name, somewhat softened, they are called by us, at this day, Earls." In the Saxon times the title was one of the highest dignity and eminence. Earl Godwin occupied a rank much higher than that of any noble of the present day. It was even applied to sovereign princes. Thus, William the Conqueror, sovereign of Normandy, is frequently called Earl of Normandy, and William of Malmesbury never mentions him otherwise. The Norman kings adopted the Saxon title, and the first earls created were dignitaries of enormous power, holding not only proprietary, but virtually sovereign sway over large districts of country. Hugh Lupus, Earl of Chester, was a real potentate within his territory, though exercising his authority in the name of the king; and so with others. But the number of earls increased rapidly, whilst the possibility of furnishing them with land and revenue diminished in proportionate ratio, so that various devices were resorted to for the purpose of furnishing the new creations with the means of support.* The dignity of the distinction was thus depreciated. Earls were then created with the name of some place appended to the title, and the third penny of the shire† was assigned unto them; for example, the Empress Maud, daughter and heir to King Henry I. created an earl in the following words:—



EARL'S CORONET.

> "I, Maud, daughter of King Henry, and ladee of the Englishmen, doe give and grant unto Geffry de Margravil for his service, and to his heirs after him, by right of inheritance, to be Earle of Essex, and to have the third pennie out of the Sheriff's Court, issuing of all pleas, as an Earle should have thorow his countrie in all things."

The earl's coronation robe is the same as a marquess's, except that he has only three rows of ermine; his cap is the same as theirs. It is uncertain when the coronets of dukes, marquesses, and earls were settled. Sir Robert Cecil, Earl of Salisbury, Viscount Cranbourne, was the first of that degree who wore a coronet. An earl's coronet is a circle of gold (silver gilt) chased as jewelled and bordered with ermine, heightened with eight pyramidical points, or rays, placed alternately with as many strawberry leaves; a large silver ball is placed on the top of each ray. His style is Right Honourable, and he is addressed by the King or Queen as Our right trusty and entirely beloved cousin, and counsellor when of the Privy Council. A countess has on her coronation robe three inches of miniver and a like number of bars of ermine, the train being a yard and half long, while her coronet is the same as that of an earl.

The eldest son of an earl bears by courtesy one of his father's inferior titles; each younger son is styled "Honourable," as the "Hon. Robert;" and each daughter is styled "Lady," as "Lady Emma."

Viscount (Viscomes) was anciently the name of him who held the chief office under an earl. The latter being often at Court, the viscount was his deputy to look after the affairs of the county. In the reign of Henry VI. 1439, the title became a degree of honour, and was made hereditary. The first viscount in England, created by patent, was John, Lord Beaumont, who was by the above monarch created Viscount Beaumont and he gave him precedence above all barons.

VISCOUNT'S CORONET.

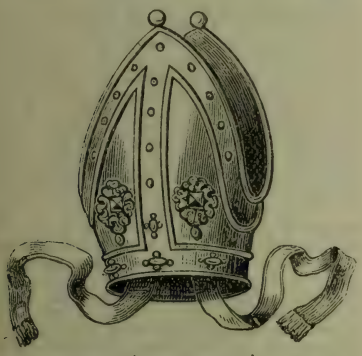
The coronation robes of a viscount are the same as an earl's, with the exception that he has only two and a half rows of ermine; his cap is the same, and the golden circle of his coronet is surmounted by sixteen silver balls. The robe

* Immediately after the Conquest earls began to be feudal, hereditary, and parliamentary—that is, by fee or tenure, by service, by inheritance and by lands. In the Domesday Book they were named earls without any addition—Earl Hugh, Earl Roger, &c.

† Of course this source of provision had a limit, and at a subsequent period the monarch was accustomed to assign pensions, not only to earls, but to other persons whom he ennobled in the following proportions:—Viscounts, a fee of 20 marks; Earls, of £20; Marquesses, a fee of 40 marks, and Dukes of £40, out of some particular part of the royal revenue. A creation fee to barons was not settled; but Charles I., when he created Mountjoy Blount Lord Mountjoy, of Thurodton, Derbyshire, assigned to him and his issue male a creation fee of 20 marks per annum.

of a viscountess has two and a half inches of miniver and two and a half bars of ermine, a yard and a quarter train, while the coronet is the same as her husband's. His style is Right Honourable, and he is addressed by the King or Queen as Our right trusty and well-beloved cousin.

All children of Viscounts bear the courtesy-title of "Honourable," as the "Hon. Henry," or the "Hon. Margaret."



Bishops.—The Bishops of England, with the exceptions noted,* are also barons of the kingdom and of Parliament. To these, says Camden:—

> "By right and custom it appertained to be, with the rest of the peers personally present at all Parliament whatsoever, there to consult, to handle, to ordain, decree, and determine in regard of the baronies which they held of the king."

Bishops take precedence of the temporal barons, and it would seem that at one time their degree of precedence went even higher, for—

> "At the coronation of Charles II. it was expressly ordered in doing homage to the king, that, according to ancient custom, the archbishops and bishops should precede all the lay lords, and even the Duke of York."

The Bishops of London, Durham, and Winchester have precedence over all other bishops, who rank according to the seniority of their consecrations.

A bishop resigning his see ceases to be a peer of Parliament.

Every bishop is entitled to the prefix of Lord, and styles himself "Right Reverend Father in God, by Divine Permission, Lord Bishop of ——."

The mitre, placed over the arms of a bishop, is a round cap, pointed and cleft at the top, from which hang two pendants, fringed at the ends, it is surmounted by a fillet of gold, set with precious stones. The mitre of the Bishop of Durham (as nominally Count Palatine of Durham) is, however, represented as issuing out of a ducal coronet.

The Bishops of Ireland who were consecrated prior to the Disestablishment Act of 1868 are entitled to the prefix of "Lord," and though retaining their former precedence, have not seats in the House of Lords. All Archbishops and Bishops of the Church of Ireland and of the Roman Catholic Church have the precedence which belonged to the Archbishops and Bishops of the Established Church of Ireland before the passing of the Irish Church Act of 1869, and they rank inter se according to the dates of their consecration or translation.

A bishop impales his arms with those of the See, but he does not bear crest, supporters, or motto

The wives and children of bishops have not any social precedence.

Baron.*—Much obscurity prevails as to the ancient meaning, and even derivation of, the word baron; and eccentric speculations have been indulged in with respect to their ancient position. By some it was supposed to have originally meant a hired soldier; by others, a free man; by others, a man equal to any other man; and so on. It never occurs as a title of dignity in Saxon annals, and although the Normans introduced it into England (the Anglo-Saxon Thane being changed into Baron), it was some time before it implied a man of distinguished mark. Earls had their barons under them, and charters are extant in which earls addressed them thus: "To all my barons, as well French as English, greeting." Even citizens of good note were sometimes called barons. The salient fact, however, is, that the barons of England soon rose to be the great moving power in the State, and how the title was accounted may be judged from a summons of Henry III. to the High Court of Parliament:—

BARON'S CORONET.

> "For he, after many troubles and enormous vexations betweene the King himselfe and Simon of Montfort, with other barons, and after appeased, did decree and ordaine that all those earls and barons of the realme of England, unto whom the King himselfe vouchsafed to direct his writs of summons, should come unto his Parliament, and none others."

The date of this (the first precept) is 49 Henry

* The seven Junior Bishops, not being of London, Durham, or Winchester, have not seats in the House of Lords. The Bishop of Sodor and Man has a seat in the House of Lords, but does not vote, as he is a legislator in the Isle of Man.

* Barons are commonly styled Lords:—e.g., Lord Coleridge.

III., 1264. The first baron created BY PATENT was John Beauchamp de Holt, created Baron Kidderminster, by Richard II. in 1387. The fact appears to be that the title or dignity of baron, at first vague and uncertain, like other designations and distinctions of disturbed times, was, like those, mellowed and moulded, with the growth of constitutional law and defined right, until it has taken its present intelligible position amongst English orders and degrees of honour.

The succession to baronies by writ is not limited to heirs male, but is vested in heirs general. In the event of the death of a baron by writ without male issue the title will fall into abeyance should he leave two or more daughters, and will so continue until only one daughter or the sole heir of one of the daughters survives. The crown can, however, at any time terminate the abeyance in favour of any one of the co-heiresses, but it cannot alienate the barony from the representatives of the first baron.

When a baron is called to the House of Peers by writ of summons the writ is in the Queen's name.

The coronation robes of a baron have but two rows of ermine; in other respects they are the same as those of other peers. King Charles II. granted a coronet to the barons, who until his reign wore only a plain circle of gold. It is formed of six silver balls, set at equal distances on a circle of gold bordered with ermine. A baroness has two inches of miniver and two bars of ermine on her coronation robe which has a train a yard long. She wears a coronet same as that of a baron.

A baron is styled Right Honourable, and by the sovereign Right trusty and well-beloved.

[To illustrate the meaning of COURTESY-TITLES, reference may be made to the terms in which a Royal Commission is issued. The first Earl Russell, a younger son of the sixth Duke of Bedford, was, before his elevation to the peerage, designated by courtesy Lord John Russell, whereas, strictly, he would have been simply "John Russell, Esq.," but for the prefix of "right honourable," derived from his political offices. In Parliament and society he was invariably spoken of as "Lord John Russell," and addressed as "My Lord," but in Royal proclamations and other documents his designation was "The Right Honourable John Russell, commonly called Lord John Russell."]

LIFE PEERS.

Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, of whom there may not be more than four are appointed by Patent, and rank as Barons for life, and each is entitled to a writ of summons to attend, and to sit and vote in the House of Lords.

They hold office during good behaviour notwithstanding the demise of the Crown, but may be removed from such office, on the address of both Houses of Parliament.

The dignity of Lords of Parliament does not descend to their heirs. Their wives rank as Baronesses, and are entitled to the prefix of "Lady," while their children are now styled "Hon." and hold special precedence.

The robes of a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary are the same as a Baron's.

BARONETS.

The title of Baronet is of ancient date, and was originally given to a class of Bannarets who were hereditary Barons of Parliament, and occupied the same position as the existing dignity, viz., between the great Barons (now peers) and lesser Barons, or Knights and gentlemen.

By the statutes of Richard II. every Archbishop, Bishop, Abbot, Prior, Duke, Earl, Baron, Baronet, and Knight of the Shire, was commanded to appear in Parliament according to ancient usage, and in an attaint under Henry VI., one of the jury challenged himself because his ancestors had been Baronets and Seigneurs des Parlesments.

This degree of nobility also existed in Ireland, where it was hereditary, in certain families. Thus, among others, St. Leger was Baronet of Slemarge; Fitzgerald, Baronet of Burnchurch; Welleslye, Baronet of Narraghe (ancestor of the Duke of Wellington); and Nangle, Baronet of the Navan. These baronets were descended from some lesser barons, or gentlemen, whom Edward III. had been advised to summon by writ, to serve and sit as barons in his next Parliament, in order that by their votes he might carry his measures in defiance of the opposition of the Ecclesiastical Lords, who had greatly crossed him in his designs. These persons having been summoned for one Parliament only did not retain their baronial rank, and were afterwards styled baronets.

The circumstance of the discovery by Sir Robert Cotton, an eminent heraldic antiquary, of Letters Patent of the 13th Edward III., conferring the dignity of baronet on William de la Pole and his heirs,* in return for a sum of money of which the King and his army stood greatly in need, is said to have decided King James I. on reviving this rank, and constituting it an hereditary dignity.

The existing baronetage of England rests on three letters patent under the Great Seal, and dates from 1611, in which year James I. established the hereditary dignity, state, and degree of Baronet, with style and title and precedency for each, his wife and children, at first limiting to 200, the number of Baronets of England to exist at one time, and ordaining that no degree, order, name, title, dignity, or state under the degree, dignity, or state of Barons of England should ever be created superior or equal to the degree of and dignity of Baronet; the second letters patent gave a newly defined precedency, at the same time undertaking that no person or persons beneath the degree of Lords of Parliament—except those enumerated—should ever have place, precedence, or pre-eminence over or equal to Baronets, and that no person or persons should have or take place between Baronets and the younger sons of Viscounts and Barons, while there was also added permission for the eldest sons of Baronets to claim the honour of Knighthood on coming of age, the right to charge their Armorial Bearings with a canton or inescutcheon of the arms of Ulster—argent a sinister hand couped at the wrist and erect gules (commonly known as the Bloody Hand)—a place near the Royal Standard in battle, a funeral ceremony "meane betwixt that of a Baron and a Knight," and a right for all Baronets, then and in future, to have Letters Patent under the Great Seal of England to the effect of former letters patent of creation and these presents; the 3rd letters patent ratified and confirmed the previous ones and ordained the Degree of Baronet to be and be reputed to be a Degree of Dignity, Hereditary, mean in place between the Barons and the Knights, defined the precedence of their eldest

BADGE OF ULSTER.

* There is also a patent of 4 Edward VI. on record granting the "order, state, rank, honour, and dignity of a Baronet" to Ralph Fane (or Vane), Knight, but without any provision for succession.

and other sons, and set forth that all doubts and questions arising in future concerning precedency, privilege, or other matter touching Baronets, should be decided according to the rules, customs, and laws of other degrees of Hereditary Dignity. In 1619 the dignity was further extended to Ireland, the Baronets of which enjoy all the rights and privileges confirmed to the Baronets of England; and the same were continued to Baronets of Great Britain who date from 1707, and to Baronets of the United Kingdom who date from 1801.

In 1624 James I. took steps to create a Scottish Branch, these werecarried out in 1625 by his son, Charles I., who granted to Baronets of Scotland, or as frequently called Nova Scotia Baronets, similar privileges (except the Ulster augmentation), and in addition grants of land in Nova Scotia with plenary baronial rights and jurisdictions and legislative powers in that plantation, and precedency above Lesser Barons in Scotland, while it was at first provided that they should charge their armorial bearings with the arms of Nova Scotia, and by a further Ordinance of Charles I. (17th November, 1629), they were granted permission to wear about the neck "an orange taunie silk ribbon whereon shall be pendant in a scutcheon argent, a saltire azure thereon an inescutcheon of the armes of Scotland, with un Imperial Crown above the scutcheon and encircled with this motto "Fax mentis Honestæ Gloria."

BADGE OF NOVA SCOTIA.

These Privileges, as well as the Patents of creation, which are identical in terms with those creating Peers, would seem to indicate that in founding the Degree of Baronet, James I. created a dignity possessing some of the privileges of the Peerage and some of the Knightage, because the families who were first honoured were territorial Barons as well as very generally drawn from the rank of persons who, as a matter of course, were Knighted; about four-fifths of the creations of 1611 being already Knights.

The baronets of England and Ireland applied to Charles I. for permission to wear the Ulster Badge in a similar manner to that of the baronets of Nova Scotia, and it is believed the King granted their request, as the badge was so worn in the 17th century, and specimens of it made for this purpose still exist. Sir George Duckett, some years ago, exhibited at the South Kensington Museum the Ulster Badge worn by Sir Thomas Frankland, 1st Bt., of Thirkleby (creation, 1662) on a diplomatic mission to Spain. Sir George Duckett has since sold the badge, which was originally set in diamonds, to a descendant of the Frankland family.

The baronets of England, of Scotland, of Great Britain, of Ireland, and of the United Kingdom, rank among themselves according to the dates of their respective patents.

The object of instituting this Degree in England and Ireland was to promote the plantation of Ulster, and to this end each baronet was required to pay into the Exchequer, upon receiving his patent under the Great Seal, the sum of £1,200 for fees of honour, and for maintaining thirty soldiers in Ireland for three years, at the rate of eightpence per diem each man. The baronetage of Nova Scotia was established in the same way with a view to colonise that country.

Every person who sought the dignity of a baronet was compelled to give proof that he was a gentleman of blood (i.e., descended on the father's side from a grandfather who bore arms), possessed a good reputation, and had an annual revenue of not less than £1,000.

Baronets are frequently and erroneously described as belonging to an order of hereditary knighthood. This mistake doubtless arose from the circumstance that all the first baronets were knighted, and that the eldest sons of baronets had the right to demand knighthood on attaining the age of twenty-one, and were, after the death of their fathers, known as "knights-baronets." A baronet does not belong to any order of knighthood, and is not a knight until he has been so dubbed. That the baronetage was never intended as an order of knighthood is moreover evidenced from the fact that baronetesses have been created, e.g., Dame Mary Bolles, of Osberton, Notts, was in 1635 made a Baronetess of Nova Scotia: and in 1686 King James II. conferred a baronetcy on Cornelius Spellman, a General in the States of Holland, with a special clause conferring on his mother the rank and title of a Baronetess of England.

The eldest sons or heirs apparent of baronets whose patents are dated prior to December 19th, 1827, have, upon attaining their majority, the privilege of demanding knighthood. This claim is, however, seldom made, possibly because George IV., on the date before referred to, ordered that all letters-patent that might thereafter be granted to confer baronetcies should be made without any such clause as is before mentioned, though this order was made without in any way prejudicing letters-patent previously granted, or to the rights and privileges of any baronet, or his heirs male. Ludlow Cotter, son of Sir James Lawrence Cotter, 4th baronet of Rockforest, in 1874, when 21 years of age, received the honour of knighthood, and this is the latest instance of the privilege being exercised.

It should, however, always be borne in mind that, though created for an ephemeral and in itself mercenary object which its members did not accomplish, the Baronetage has always been a dignified degree of hereditary distinction, the original members having been carefully selected from wealthy, distinguished and noble (i.e., arms bearing) families, of great territorial and social position most of the early creations being in favour of representatives of Hastings or Early Plantagenet "tenantes in capite," or Barons as then understood; and the title is now bestowed, and willingly accepted, as the reward of merit, or eminence in any pursuit or position. Every gentleman upon being created a baronet is required to record his pedigree in one of the Colleges of Arms. On December 3rd, 1783, King George III. promulgated an order in which every baronet was required to register his pedigree, and to receive a certificate from one of the Colleges of Arms. This order, however, gave such umbrage to a large portion of the then existing baronets, that his Majesty revoked it, but ordained that it should remain in force as to subsequent creations.

A baronet's wife is entitled to the prefix of either "Dame" or "Lady."

KNIGHTS.

Though knights are ranged low upon the lists of precedency, their rank is not only the most ancient, but the most illustrious; for in former ages all men distinguished by valour or military service became knights, and admittance to the order of knighthood was a valued object.

Knighthood is essentially an institution of the days of chivalry. The latter word has itself an affinity with horsemanship, and knights-bachelors all equites aurati (golden-spurred horsemen). The Roman knight was eques "a horseman," and his rank was Eques, next below the Senatorial. In other countries, the ranks answering to our knights-bachelors indicate by their names their original occupation as military equestrians; hence the German reiter, the French chevalier, &c. The Germans, however, have another appellation, Knecht, from which our own word knight is derived.

The martial kings of the Franks used to give arms, with many solemnities, to their sons, and others, and to gird them with a sword; and our own King Alfred, when he made his nephew Athelstane a knight, gave him a scarlet mantle set with precious stones, and a Saxon sword with a "golden scabbard." Further on in the course of time, we find the ceremony of installation assuming a solemnly religious character, including previous confession and absolution, vigils in the church, &c. "And after the gospel," according to Ingulphus, who flourished shortly before the Norman invasion, "the priest was to put the sword, being previously blessed, upon the knight's neck, with his benediction; and thus, after he had heard mass again and received the sacrament, he became a lawful knight."

For a long time ecclesiastics claimed the duty and privilege of dubbing knights. William Rufus was knighted by Archbishop Lanfranc; but this custom was put an end to, and afterwards kings were accustomed to send their sons to neighbouring courts to receive the honour of knighthood. Thus Henry II. sent to David, King of Scots, Malcolm, King of Scots, to Henry II., and Edward I. to the King of Castile, to take of them "military or virile arms," a term used in those ages for the creation of a knight. The gilt spurs, the privilege of using a signet, etc., were among the conditions of knighthood. Not only the King, but the great earls, created knights, as we are told by Matthew Paris: "Here the Earl of Gloucester invested with a militarie girdle his brother William," and Gilbert de Clare was also knighted by Simon de Montfort. In fact, any knight could create a new one. But this was afterwards prohibited, and the privilege restricted to the Sovereign, or to some high personage deputed by him.

The title of knight was desired and granted as an honourable addition or mark of distinction to the highest dignity, name, and rank; but this was only when it was received under honourable circumstances like those just described, for the possession of property at one time entitled to knighthood; and in the reign of Henry III., freeholders with a stated income were compelled to become knights under a fine. A proclamation was issued that whoever had £15 in land and above "should be dight in his armes," and endowed with knighthood, or be fined, "to the end that England as well as Italie might be strengthened with chivalry." But those knights in virtue of property, simply called milites, held a very different position from the milites gladio cincti, or knights whom the King had created by cincture of sword and belt. The latter class of dignity was highly prized, and it is certain that the obligations of such knighthood tended powerfully to elevate the mind and chasten the morals of those bound thereby, especially when the King conferred the dignity with the aid of religious ceremonials, when the Bishop administered the following oath:

> "Sir, you that desire to receive the order of knighthood, swear, before God, and this holy book, that you will not fight against the King, who now bestoweth the order of knighthood upon you; you shall also swear to maintain and defend all ladies, gentlewomen, widows, and orphans; and you shall shun no adventure of your person in any way where you shall happen to be."

The oath being taken, two lords led him to the King, who drew his sword, and laid it upon his head, saying, "God and St. George make thee a good knight."

KNIGHT'S HELMET.

Seven ladies then gird on his sword, and four knights his spurs, and other customs were observed. These ceremonies were afterwards dispensed with, and he on whom the title was conferred simply knelt down, when the King with a drawn sword slightly tapped him on the shoulder, saying to him in French, "Sois Chevalier au nom de Dieu;" that is, Be thou a knight in the name of God; afterwards adding, "Avance, Chevalier" (Arise, Sir Knight).

Some contend that knights-bachelors were not full knights, but a middle degree between knights and esquires. "There be," says Camden, "who would have bachelors so called, as one would say bas chevaliers, that is, knights of low degree; although others derive their name from the French verb battalier, which means to combat or fight it out." On the other hand, respectable writers have contended that the term "bachelor" indicates the non-descent of the title, as if the knight were unmarried. Passing by these discussions, it may be remarked without disparagement that a knight-bachelor is scarcely regarded as the equal of the member of a defined knightly order.

In addition to knights-bachelors there are seven knightly orders, named the Garter, the Thistle, St. Patrick, the Bath, Star of India, St. Michael and St. George, the Indian Empire, and the Royal Victorian.

The wife of a knight is entitled to the prefix of either "Dame" or "Lady."

A knight's helmet is depicted, full-faced, with visor up, and without bars.

Judges of the County Courts

Rank ex officio and only during their official life, before all Esquires,* and are entitled to the prefix of "His Honour," but neither their wives nor issue have any defined precedence.

Esquires.

Amid the superfluity of discussion respecting the origin and meaning of the title of esquire, the obvious and natural conclusion is that, as the derivation is from scutifer (shield-bearer), the esquires were those who bore the shields of princes, nobles, and knights, and, being themselves of respectable quality, imparted some of that respectability (further reflected from the great persons whom they attended) to their office. They were frequently the personal friends and companions of their patrons. Thence the title became an object of ambition to gentlemen of the middle class; and Camden says that "the title of esquire which in former times was a title of charge and office only, crept forth among other titles of dignity and worship." The same author enumerates five classes of esquires, of graduated degrees of honour. We know no such distinction at the present time, but it has been a subject of dispute amongst our most learned writers to whom the title of esquire really belongs.

ESQUIRE'S HELMET.

It is, however, well understood that those to whom the title is of right due are noblemen's younger sons, and the eldest sons of such younger sons; the sons of baronets, and the eldest sons of knights;

* In Ireland, however, by warrant dated Oct. 12th, 1885, the Judge of the High Court of Admiralty, the Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General, and the Serjeants-at-Law, have precedence over the Judges of the County Courts.

officers of the sovereign's court and household, if holding notable employment; Commanders, Companions, and Members of any Order of Knighthood; Companions of the Distinguished Service Order; persons to whom the Sovereign grants arms with the title of esquire; persons who are styled esquires by the Sovereign in their patents, commissions, or appointments, such as sheriffs of counties, officers in the army and navy of the rank of Captain and upwards; justices of the peace for counties, while in the commission, or in office.

An esquire's helmet is depicted, in profile, with visor closed.

Gentlemen.

If antiquarian controversy wax warm as to the classes entitled to the style of esquire, the qualification for the name of gentleman has engrossed still more elaborate discussion. The question is not who is above it, but who is below it; for the highest in the land is proud of being a true gentleman; and it was regarded as the highest compliment ever paid to King George IV., when, as Prince Regent, he was called "the first gentleman in Europe." But if the true gentleman stand at so exalted an elevation, the assumption of the word has become so common as to have marred its meaning, which strictly speaking is the gentility conferred by the lawful bearing of arms, and is in that sense equivalent to the word nobleman. One not improbable derivation of the word gentleman is, that towards the decline of the Roman empire there were two companies of particularly distinguished soldiers, mostly of good families; one of these were called Gentiles, the other Scutarii; and it has been suggested that the titles, gentleman and esquire, may have been derived from this. Again, it is surmised that gentleman means descent from gentle lineage, to which Selden adds, that it is necessary he should follow the example of that lineage.

Solicitors, and persons in sundry other positions, are personally entitled to the addendum of "gentleman" to their names—an honour which few care to contend for, while fewer still would care to see "gent' written at the end of their names. The words "esquire" and "gentleman" have become so hackneyed, that though in their intrinsic acceptation they are highly honourable, yet as popularly written, each one is literally—nominis umbra—the shadow of a name. The following, however, may be accepted as a direct definition of the relations of gentlemen, as between each other:—

> "The chief of the family takes place of any gentleman of the family, and though generally it be believed that gentlemen have no precedency one from another, yet reason and discretion allow that a gentleman of three generations should cede to a gentleman of ten, if there be not a very great disparity between their fortunes, and for the same reason that a gentleman of three generations claims precedency from any ordinary landed man who has newly acquired his lands.

MEMBERS OF THE CLERICAL, NAVAL, MILITARY, LEGAL AND MEDICAL PROFESSIONS, AND OF SOME OTHER CLASSES,

Have among themselves certain relative rank that is peculiar to each class; but, when associating together, the precedence is mostly of a local character, and being arbitrary, it does not give a defined position to any person who is excluded from the recognised "Table of Precedence."

CITIZENS AND BURGESSES.

Camden tells us that these "are such as in their own city perform any public function, or fill any particular office, or by election have a room in our High Court of Parliament." But this description must now be considerably enlarged, and practically the name is applied to all freemen and electors.

FOREIGN TITLES.

Foreign titles borne by British subjects afford their holders no precedence whatever in this country, and, strictly speaking, a royal license should be obtained for their use. It should also be borne in mind that foreign titles cannot always be valued in comparison with English ones, according to their nominal rank, but their relative value has to be judged by the fact whether their possessors belong to the nobiles majores or nobiles minores [see "Nobility"] of their respective countries.

Foreign authorities generally assume that titular distinction accompanied by an hereditary seat in the Diet or Parliament constitutes high nobility, and in France and Germany this is practically co-extensive with the ducal houses only. In England, however, the nobiles majores (or high nobility) are co-extensive with the whole peerage (dukes, marquesses, earls, viscounts, and barons), such having an hereditary seat in the Upper House. It, therefore, follows that only those families of the high nobility abroad, such as the herzogs and a few landgraves in Germany, and in France the dukes and two or three of the feudatory comtes can claim our peerage (dukes to barons) as equals in titular distinction, while the marquises in France and the margraves and grafs of the Empire in Germany—if the latter are the titular chiefs of their families—are equal to our rank of baronet, the next rank (but without parliamentary seat) in England below the peerage; further, the nobiles minores of Germany and France, varying between in France the rank of comte to that of baron or plain ecuyer gentilhomme, and in Germany the grafs of the new Empire down to, and including, the freiherrs and herr vons, rank according to the antiquity of their families with the families in England who are also of the nobiles minores (knights, esquires, and gentlemen).

THE PEERAGE.

The ALPHABETICAL ARRANGEMENT includes—(i) surnames of Peers, (ii) superior and inferior titles of Peers, (iii) titles borne by eldest sons of Peers, and (iv) Peerages that having become extinct, dormant, or abeyant, are still represented by living members in the female line.

To EACH BIOGRAPHY OF A PEER is added information concerning every living male descended in the male line from the first Peer and of all living females being issue of males so descended.

ABBREVIATIONS. See Index.

EXTINCT, DORMANT, and ABEYANT PEERAGES are referred to separately.

AN INDEX to the surnames and christian names of Sons, Daughters, Brothers, Sisters, and Uncles and Aunts of Peers, who are referred to in the work, is given in a separate section.

DECEASED FEMALE COLLATERALS and their issue are not as a rule referred to in the work.

ISSUE of the members of two families mentioned in the work which happen to have intermarried, will be always found under the father's name.

The CHRISTIAN NAMES OF THE HEIR-apparent, or of the heir-presumptive, are in every case given in capital letters.

"Occurrences during Printing" are noted in a separate section.

☞ It is desirable that information relating to Births, Baptisms, Marriages, Deaths, Promotions, Alteration of Addresses, &c., be forwarded to the Editor from time to time as they occur.
